In CS6, a feature called Content Aware Fill was added to Photoshop, just like in Lightroom 4 mentioned earlier. It allows you to use certain color motifs to fill in the gaps in an image. For example, if you add a photo of an underexposed subject far away (for example, if you picked up a cell phone), Photoshop can automatically make the subject look better through the use of identified areas on the picture that match closely related colors. However, like in CS5, this tool is a little weak and lacks a lot of accuracy and also creates a less-than-satisfactory visual result. It's necessary to have copies of images on your computer for when they are developed in Photoshop. CS6, like the last few versions, creates lots of temporary.psd files and.png files. I have a 5 TB external hard drive that I use for this purpose and storing my projects. Other people have their projects buried in Dropbox or Google Drive or whatever service provider they like. The only thing that matters is how much storage you need and for what you are storing. In my experience, I was able to import 20-24 edited 3000 x 5000 pixel.psd files and export 9-10 sRGB jpegs with no problems. The Lasso tool has been improved for easier selection. Lines are drawn in the image with an easy-to-follow guide across the edge. It's also good to see that you're still able to preserve the layer mask that is useful for making composites. The paint bucket tool now has a selection brush and is arguably one of the best tools in the toolbox. The basic tool is now a bit more dedicated to painting than it was when it was part of the Eraser tool. It was very useful when I was covering up content, for example, to just paint in a new layer.

We are bringing together multiple new departments, including AI, Research, Design, Product Management, and Engineering, under one roof to explore the changing nature of how and where people create, and editing, imagery in their everyday lives.” Sensei AI will be available to customers in the coming months and provides a powerful new dimension of editing ideas that will help accelerate creativity and innovation in industries like healthcare and automotive design, as well as art, fashion, and architecture fields. New collaboration functions and app updates based on these innovations will be available to Photoshop users by 2018. DGX-1 and DGX-2, the world’s first GPU-based AI supercomputers, will be available to customers in 2019, jointly designed and built by NVIDIA and Adobe, with support for Photoshop Photoshop and the rest of the Adobe product line. Photoshop will be reinforced as the ultimate creative tool provider with new updates to the interface in 2017 and 2018, including via built-in AI tools. “We’re reinventing Photoshop through technology, and AI platforms represent the biggest shift in software since the big three: GPUs, CPUs and FPGAs,” said Jay Blumenkrantz, vice president of solutions for talented designers. “We are connecting AI to Photoshop to accelerate creativity, share ideas and solve the world’s toughest problems.”
